INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE<sup>1</sup>

The twenty three amici curiae joining in this brief are all nonprofit, pro-life pregnancy centers in Illinois. Like the Petitioners, these centers have been targeted by a viewpoint discriminatory state law designed to force them to promote abortion—a procedure they oppose as a matter of conscience and do not offer. Unlike the Petitioners, however, all health care personnel and health care facilities in Illinois (including the amici) are currently protected by an unreported preliminary injunction order issued by the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois in National Institute of Family and Life Advocates (“NIFLA”) v. Rauner, No. 16-C-50310 (N.D. Ill. July 19, 2017).

Because the Illinois district court’s injunction is based on this Court’s well-established Free Speech principles, principles which were largely disregarded by the Ninth Circuit in Petitioner’s case, the amici have a significant interest in this Court’s reaffirmation of those principles and reversal of the Ninth Circuit’s decision.

The names, charitable purposes and services of the twenty three amici are set forth below (an asterisk marks centers which are NIFLA members):

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

A woman has a right to choose life for her unborn child. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 153 (1973); see also The Life Ctr., Inc. v. City of Elgin, 993 F. Supp. 2d 863, 871 (N.D. Ill. 2013) (enjoining a municipal ordinance which inhibited women’s access to a pregnancy center’s free services as unduly burdensome of “the right of a woman to choose life”). Since Roe, pro-life citizens have organized thousands of pregnancy centers like the Petitioners and amici to help women exercise their right to choose life and reject abortion by proclaiming the clear message that God loves every woman and child, including those in utero,<sup>2</sup> and that He can bring about great good even from the most difficult and unexpected of pregnancies.<sup>3</sup>

Under the Free Speech Clause of the First Amendment, pro-life pregnancy centers cannot be required to agree with or compelled to promote the state’s message concerning abortion as a condition of exercising their right to offer charitable services and proclaim an exclusively pro-life message to those in need. And women should not have their ability to receive free pregnancy support and their right to choose life for their child unduly burdened by state efforts to commandeer the mission and message of these centers.

<sup>3</sup> The value of women and children in crisis pregnancies is a central theme in the Bible. Even the genealogy of Jesus the Messiah in Matthew 1:1-16 honors five women—Tamar (Genesis 38), Rahab (Joshua 2 and 6), Ruth (Ruth), Bathsheba (2 Samuel 11-12), and Mary—who overcame great obstacles to give birth.

ARGUMENT*I. Pro-life Pregnancy Centers Cannot Be Required to Promote the State’s Position on Abortion as a Condition of Exercising Their Right to Offer Free Pregnancy Services and Proclaim an Exclusively Pro-Life Message.

Petitioners’ opening brief on the merits more than adequately covers how the California Reproductive FACT Act violates the protections set forth in the Free Speech Clause of the First Amendment. It demonstrates how the Petitioners, like amici, are engaged in noncommercial advocacy which is entitled to the fullest protections of the First Amendment. Pet. Brief at p. 40. It also demonstrates how the FACT Act compels speech in a viewpoint discriminatory way in violation of well-established Free Speech principles. Id. at 31.

This brief will focus on how failing to reinforce First Amendment protections in Petitioners’ case will have a devastating effect on charitable efforts to serve women, particularly those in Illinois—where courts have preliminarily enjoined a recent state law which conditions statutory health care right of conscience protections on compliance with the State’s mandate that conscientious objectors to abortion must nevertheless inform women about the “benefits” of abortion and where they can be had. Not only does Illinois’s law require amici and other conscientious objectors to provide information about abortion providers, they must parrot the state legislature’s opinion that abortion has “benefits” even though amici believe that abortion has no benefits and results in the loss of innocent life.

- A. Pregnancy centers like the Petitioners and amici were organized not only as a charitable effort to meet the needs of pregnant women but also as an effort to promote a clearly articulable and exclusively pro-life message.

As the mission statements of the Petitioners and amici make plain, these centers are nearly all religious, nonprofit organizations that exist to provide women with free pregnancy services and information so as to help them choose to give birth and care for their child rather than have an abortion. Their viewpoint and clearly articulable message is succinctly and exclusively pro-life: God loves every woman, man, and child, including those in utero, and abortion is harmful and immoral.

These centers communicate their message in both word and deed. Ultrasounds have become one of the most powerful media for the pro-life message. An ultrasound provides parents a window into the womb to reveal their preborn child. If a picture is worth a thousand words, a live ultrasound image of your baby is worth a million. As Laurence Tribe writes,

Many [people], who can readily envision the woman and her body, who cry out for her right to control her destiny, barely envision the fetus within that woman and do not imagine as real the life it might have been allowed to lead. For them, the life of the fetus becomes an invisible abstraction.

LAURENCE TRIBE, ABORTION: THE CLASH OF ABSOLUTES 5 (Norton 1980). No pro-life pamphlet can communicate the pro-life message and render the invisible visible like an ultrasound.

As argued more fully in Petitioners' brief, these centers have a right to speak or not to speak on the very public issue of abortion under the First Amendment. Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 714 (1977) (recognizing the right not to speak as equally protected as the freedom to speak under the First Amendment); Riley v. National Fed'n of the Blind of N.C., Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 796-97 (1988) (holding that the Free Speech Clause protects the freedom "of both what to say and what not to say.")

They also have a fundamental right to control the content of their message. Hurley v. Irish-Am. Gay, Lesbian & Bisexual Grp. of Boston, 515 U.S. 557, 572-573 (1995). This Court recognized in Riley that the content of a speaker's message is "necessarily alter[ed]" when the state "[m]andat[es] speech that [the] speaker would not otherwise make." 487 U.S. at 795. If, as in Hurley, a nonprofit parade organizer has a First Amendment right to refuse inclusion of an off-message gay pride float regardless of whether the parade has a "narrow, succinctly articulable message," id. at 569, how much more so does a nonprofit pregnancy center committed to a narrow, succinctly articulable pro-life/anti-abortion message have a right to refuse to include and publish the state's pro-abortion messaging.

If the Ninth Circuit’s overbroad<sup>4</sup> definition of “professional speech” is upheld and the Free Speech rights of nonprofit pregnancy centers disregarded, a state in which euthanasia is legal could compel nonprofit anti-euthanasia centers—which exist solely to help men and women who struggle with suicidal thoughts choose life and not death—to post information on the availability of state-subsidized euthanasia programs and the “benefits” of assisted suicide as a “legal treatment option.”

B. Rather than respect rights of conscience and allow room for opposing viewpoints on abortion, California, like Illinois, is targeting centers like Petitioners and amici because of their conscientious objections to abortion.

Following Roe in 1973, many states moved to enact health care right of conscience protections.<sup>5</sup> States recognized that if women were to have a constitutional right to abortion, the thousands of health care professionals who have ethical and conscientious objections to abortion must have the right to refuse to participate in any way in the provision of abortion related services. In 1977, Illinois enacted what some called the “gold standard” of conscience protection laws.<sup>6</sup> The Illinois Health Care Right of Conscience Act (IHRCA), states that

“people and organizations hold different beliefs about whether certain health care services are morally acceptable,” and that no one should “be civilly or criminally liable by reason of his or her refusal to perform, assist, counsel, suggest, recommend, refer or participate in any way in any particular form of health care service which is contrary to the conscience of such” provider. 745 Ill. COMP. STAT. 70/4. The purpose of the law was “to respect and protect the right of conscience of all persons who refuse to . . . act contrary to their conscience or conscientious convictions . . .” Id. at § 70/2.

Forty years later, Illinois, like California, determined that conscientious objectors to abortion were no longer deserving of this level of respect or state protection. Instead, Illinois turned the shield into a sword by including the following compelled speech components in the amended IHCRCA:

- Id. at § 70/6.1 now provides that it is the “Duty of ... health care personnel [with conscientious objections]” to “inform his or her patient of the patient’s ... legal treatment options...and benefits of the treatment options...”
- § 6.1 also imposes an affirmative obligation on health care providers with conscientious objections to develop protocols to ensure that women are informed of all their legal treatment options for their pregnancy and the benefits of each option, including abortion.
- § 6.1 requires providers that do not provide abortions as a matter of conscience to, at a minimum, inform women in writing “about other health care providers who they reasonably believe may offer” abortions.

By amending IHRCA to impose these requirements, Illinois, like California decided to impose compelled speech requirements on those who were opposed to providing abortion related services but nevertheless wished to freely serve pregnant women in other ways.

Petitioners’ brief at p. 2 covers how the FACT Act targets only centers that “discourage abortion.” Amici point out that Illinois did the same thing by using IHRCA to target pro-life centers and force them to engage in speech and action (referral) contrary to their pro-life principles. Because the California and Illinois share this essential feature, i.e. singling-out pro-life centers in order to force them to carry a pro-abortion message, the amici wish only to highlight why the United States District Court of Northern Illinois was right to follow this Court’s decisions in Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 135 S. Ct. 2218 (2015) and Matal v. Tam, 137 S. Ct. 1744, 1750 (2017) rather than the Ninth Circuit’s decision (which refused to apply those cases) when it preliminarily enjoined Illinois from enforcing the recent amendment to the IHRCA.

Unlike the Ninth Circuit which contravened Reed and Tam when it refused to apply strict scrutiny to the FACT Act despite Respondents’ admission that the purpose of the law is to target “crisis pregnancy centers” because of their viewpoint that “discourag[es]” abortion, the Illinois district court found Reed and Tam to be dispositive of the level of scrutiny required of the viewpoint discriminatory, compelled speech requirements of the amended IHCRCA. The Illinois district court read Reed and Tam to require strict scrutiny<sup>7</sup> of a viewpoint discriminatory law—even in the context of commercial speech as in Tam and certainly in the context of the non-commercial speech of amici.

The viewpoint discrimination is particularly egregious under both the California and Illinois statutes. While crisis pregnancy centers are required to provide information on topics such as the “benefits” of abortions and where to obtain them, abortion clinics are not required to provide information on pregnancy centers and the benefits of not having an abortion and the life of the child.

Ultimately, the state of Illinois was enjoined from enforcing its law because it could not answer a fundamental question—why has it targeted only conscientious objectors as those who must disseminate the State’s message concerning the availability or benefits of abortion? The same question and lack of a constitutionally permissible answer haunts and dooms the FACT Act.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Viewpoint discrimination is actually never permissible. West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642 (1943); Rosenberger v. Rector and Visitors of University of Virginia, 515 U.S. 819, 835 (1995).

<sup>8</sup> IHCRCA fails even as a content based regulation and as a violation of the unconstitutional conditions doctrine. Rumsfeld v. Forum for Academic & Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 59-60 (2006) (holding that the government may not force a citizen to choose between free speech and a state benefit).

II. Women Should Not Have Their Ability to Receive Free Pregnancy Support and Their Right to Choose Life For Their Child Unduly Burdened By State Efforts to Commandeer the Mission and Message of Pro-Life Pregnancy Centers.

Far too many women are left to face their pregnancies alone, afraid, and without the information and resources they need to care for themselves and their child. A pregnancy, especially an unexpected one, can be a life-defining crisis fraught with uncertainty and laden with far-reaching consequences. From decades of experience, the amici have learned that providing information about alternatives to abortion, offering a free pregnancy test or ultrasound, access to parenting classes, baby clothes, and a kind word or prayer can mean all the difference in the world to an expectant mother, a fearful father, and their unborn child.

To uphold the FACT Act in the face of such well-established Free Speech principles as the prohibitions against compelled speech and viewpoint discrimination would allow states to impose a pro-abortion litmus test on those who seek to assist pregnant women with free pregnancy support services. By limiting the pool of available pregnancy centers to those few that would be willing to promote abortion, California and Illinois are not only violating the autonomy that these centers are constitutionally entitled to have over their own speech, they are also unjustifiably putting thousands of women at risk of losing access to the free pregnancy support and services these centers, in furtherance of their religious and moral convictions, have long provided. The twenty three amici alone help roughly 14,000 women a year in Illinois, and a single center like CareNet distributes an estimated $400,000 in free goods and pregnancy services each year. Thus, California and Illinois seek not only to put their thumb on the scales of our public debate concerning abortion by compelling pregnancy centers' speech, they also, in doing so, deprive women and children of desperately needed services and support.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the Ninth Circuit should be reversed.
